WELCOME to New Readers

The fastest growing circulation in San Diego County—that can rightly be said of the Review's subscription list. Eighty new names of bonafide subscribers appear in this column today. These subscribers were obtained without premiums, high pressure salesmanship or methods other than a convincing sales talk by our subscription salesman, Rudy Galindo. The people of this community want a home-printed and published newspaper, and the fact that more than 350 new families began reading this newspaper in the past six weeks, confirms the statement. Advertisers are finding that this kind of circulation gets results.

There are two ways subscribers can help to make this a better newsaper—send in your news or call H6-9134, or if you know someone who would like to subscribe call Rudy Galindo at this office, H6-1168.

Committee to Scan Promoters

The following resolution was presented and adopted unanimously by the Board of Directors of the Lemon Grove Chamber of Commerce at its meeting on August 3.

"With an ever increasing population and a comparable increase in business institutions, the Lemon Grove area (generally understood to be the Lemon Grove School District) is continually subject to solicitations of all sorts, promotion of community projects and programs developed under the guise of Community betterment

"The Board of Directors directs the Civic Committee to review all requests for solicitation and promotional programs. Following each review the committee will advise the Board as to what action it recommends be taken in each case.

"The Board of Directors urges the members of the Lemon Grove Chamber of Commerce to ascertain from the President or Secretary the action taken in each case before making a contribution or agreeing to sponsor any project or program."

The members of the Civic committee are V. J. Dorman, chairman; Robert Lindley (Lindley's Drug Store); Jack Sanders (Lemon Grove Hardware); Stephen Westover (Lemon Grove Lumber Co.); Channing Mason (Mason's Feed Store).

Place your ad. in the Review, the paper that is read in Lemon Grove.

Can Can Dancers to Show Charms

After a lot of hard work and fun, the choreens of the Lions Club are ready to give their version of the French Can Can dance. In the lineup there is any shape or size that you could ask for—tall, short thin or plump. The French Fi Fis and MiMis have nothing on the Lions' Forest Baxter, Grant Bradley, Al Huebsch, Fred Michels, Jim Snodgras, Larry Hunter, Art Walker, Noble Hercricks, and their standins, Art Chappelle, John Hill and Steve Winans.

In their black frocks, and bonnets with loads of pink ruffles on them, they present a never to be forgotten picture As for legs, Ooo la, la, what a mess of legs!

The early French definition of the Can Can was noise racket and scandal—and if the dress rehearsal is an example of what is to come, the Lions will live up to the meaning.

There is a million laughs in store for you during the three minute dance.

Setback Fight Goes to Board

A neighborhood disagreement over a new house that allegedly protrudes beyond setback lines will be considered by the County Supervisors on Monday.

Neighbors have protester because a house built by Harold and Bertha Gasnor, 7170 Mt. Vernon street, is said to violate setback restrictions.

The County Planning Commission voted four to three at last week's hearing to have the structure moved. Monday the recommendation will be acted upon by the supervisors.

Although declining to be quoted,, one supervisor said the Planning Commission's vote was not recorded correctly, and was actually four to four.

When a member of such a hearing keeps silent on a roll call, a "yes" vote is automatically recorded. As pointed out there are eight members on the commission

DOUGLAS MEYERS INJURED

Douglas Meyers, 10-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Meyer, 3217 Buena Vista drive, received multiple bruises and abrasions when he ran into the path of a truck in front of 7259 San Miguel avenue, Monday afternoon. He was treated by a private physician.

Community Center Dance and Festival Netted $416

Residents of this entire community will be pleased to know that besides being a social success, the Community Center dance and festival was a credit financially. The sum of $416.59 has been banked to the credit of the Center as a result of the various activities in connection with the dance and from donations made as follows: Lemon Grove Lumber Co., $50.00; Business Women's League, $10.00; Lemon Grove Lion's Club, $10.00; three unlisted contributors, $3.00; Mutual Liquid Gas Co., two plates and gas; Grove Pastry Shop, 10 dozen rolls.

Those whose work contributed materially to the fund: Ladies Aid of Congregational Church cake booth; Young Mrs. of Congregational Church, coffee booth; Parent-Teacher Association, cookie and soft drink booth; Forward Club Seniors and Juniors, hamburger booth; Theta Omicron Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi, hot dog booth

Mrs. Gilbert Dunham, general chairman, and Charles Whitlock in charge of tickets, and others too numerous to mention worked hard for the success of the first dance and festival. The success is a testimonial for their planning, hard work and co-operative efforts.

Work is proceeding satisfactorially on the building except for painters and plumbers. A. E. Donnelly would appreciate help that any local plumbers might wish to give.

Paynes Buy a Paper up North

Mr. and Mrs. Brent Payne, the founders of the Lemon Grove Review, have purchased the Valley of the Moon Review, published at Boyes Hot Springs, Sonoma county.

The Paynes just can't keep their fingers out of printing ink. While on a trip in the Northern part of the State, they found this paper for sale. With the support of the Boyes Hot Springs business people, who do extensive advertising the Paynes could not afford to pass up the opportunity.

Coming from Sonoma county in 1947 to establish this news paper, Mr. and Mrs. Payne gave Lemon Grove community loyalty and good service. They have a host of friends here who wish them well in their new venture They expect to leave Monday.

Taylors Had Varied Career

By AGNES FERRIS WHITLOCK

One way to get acquainted with people is to travel with them. Something along the way is bound to remind them of back home, and start a conversation That is what happened on a recent trip to Los Angeles, with Mr. and Mrs. Ted Taylor of Taylor Made Ceramics, and Mrs. Edward Beistline.

Most of the time was spent going from one ceramic shop to another, which was very interesting to a novice ceramist. In a fog of this kind and that kind of glaze, fireing, slip, china paint, etc., the question came up as to how Mrs Taylor got started in the ceramic business.

She was born in Bellwoood, Nebraska, and as she says, was corn fed. She has worked in many fields—kind of a Jill of all trades She tested cream for butter fat; worked in Safeway Stores for many years; was in the Woman's Army, and on many other jobs. So it just seemed natural for her to buy into a business that she knew nothing about but which had a strange fascination. Mrs. Taylor illustrates how a person can start from scratch and build a business. At present she does commercial work as well as handling supplies and fireing for amateur ceramists. She welcomes visitors and will be glad to answer any questions on ceramics that they may wish to ask.

Mr. Taylor hails from Aberdeen, Miss., the land of the cotton. He works for the Safeway Stores, but in spare time helps his wife in their business. He finds the ceramic field interesting, too There are many men in this field, and because it is something both men and women can do, it makes a convenient family hobby. Mr Taylor, like most men in this business, is interested in mould-making, which takes up most of his spare time.

Both of the Taylors are enthusiastic about Lemon Grove and look forward to a happy future here.

Hay Making has a Field Day

Hay making techniques to improve hay quality will be demonstrated at the third annual Fall Field Day at Davis on September 9. Farm Advisor N. C. Moore of the University of California Agricultural Extension Service, says commercial hay making equipment will be used for the demonstration, which is being staged jointly by the Divisions of Agronomy and Agricultural Engineering.

Dr. F. N. Briggs, chairman of the Aronomy Division of the College of Agriculture, says visiting farmers will have a chance to see demonstrations on crops that were not in season during the Spring Field Day in May. Among them will be castor beans, corn, beans and forage crops.

Moore says there will also be some interesting visitors at this event. J. Earl Coke, new director of the Agricultural Extension Service will be on hand as guest speaker at the noon-day luncheon. There will be at least 125 members of the California Flying Farmers who will include this day in their own annual two-day convention.

The program is scheduled from 9:30 in the morning until 5:30 in the afternoon. Bus service will be provided to and from the University Airport for visitors coming by plane. Moore says all interested farmers are invited to attend, and may receive further details by contacting the local Agricultural Extension Service office, room 404, U.S. Custom Bldg., San Diego.

Lids Must Fit for Home Canning

Be sure each jar you use for home canning has a lid that fits.

If the jar needs a screw band, see that iti s the right depth and diameter.

Use a new lid each time, if you are using metal lids with sealing compound. Use a new lid, too, if zinc screw caps are bent along the rim or their porcelain lining is broken. Do not use a glass lid nicked along one rim

If a jar shows even a slight nick on the top edge, do not use it with a rubber ring or metal disk that rests on the top.

Always use rings of the right size for the jars.

BOY SCOUT NEWS

Five boys from Troop 8 of the Lemon Grove Boy Scouts spent last week end camping at Jamul

This week end they will be kept busy participating in the Powow. They will appear in the parade and will assist in many ways during the event.

Marjorie Main, who "just missed" the list of "best dressed" women, warns Percy Kilbride to get some new underwear. The lovable comedy team appears in Universal-International's "Ma and Pa Kettle," repeating the roles they created in "The Egg and I" Plays the Grove on Friday and Saturday.

When Old Friends Get Together

Mrs. Tyler Drew and son Roger of San Miguel avenue, and Mr and Mrs. F. G. Capron, Ensenada street, Monterey Heights, spent last week end in Los Angeles The occasion was a double birthday celebration for Mr. Capron's father, Hugh Capron, and for Mrs. Drew's father, Richard Abbott.

Both men, who are the same age, 72, spent their school days together, crossed the plains together some 50 years ago in covered wagons, and eventually went their separate ways, only to find themselves together again with their families after all these years. There were 24 members of the two families who gathered for a picnic in Elysian Park, Los Angeles on Sunday to observe this auspicous occasion.

It is unfortunate that today's vast hodge-podge of Government policies and programs is still tagged with the "New Deal" label. The continued use of that phrase obscures the fact that what has taken place in Washington in the last half of the Forties is a far cry from the so-called recovery program of the last decade. The New Deal was peanuts. Its entire cost, for one peak year, was less than the amount Washington plans to spend this year for salaries alone! In 1940, the Federal Government paid out $7 billion to individuals and $3 billion to business. Estimates for the current fiscal year are $26 billion to individuals and $20 billion to business. The New Deal was intended to cope with a depression. Government spending then was defended as a pump priming operation to stimulate the flow of commerce. But the depression has been over for a long time. And today's big government—nearly five times bigger than the New Deal days—no longer primes the pump. It does the pumping! Government today is business' biggest single customer. And government is far greater in size than any single industry or almost any group of industries. Unfortunately, as Herbert Hoover pointed out in his 75th birthday speech, "Governments do not develop gadgets of improved living." America achieved its greatness and the highest standard of living the world has ever known long before the days of super government. Hoover pointed out too, that eventually, as the Nation's business becomes more and more a governmental affair, the "Government either takes over, which is socialism, or dictates institutional and economic life, which is facism." The former President termed the present course of government "the back road to collectivism." It is as good a description as any. Whatever term best describes it, it seem obvious that the old "New Deal" label has worn thin and should be discarded.

The Review carried the report of three fires last week. One of them, at least, could have been disastrous . We are dependent upon the County Forestry Department for help in times like these. How much better it would be if this area had a fire protection district, with one or more fully equipped crews, ready for immediate response in case of fire. The larger the district, the better protection we could have. The San Diego County Board of Suprvisors could do well to investigate the matter of one large over-all, county-wide fire protection district for the unincorporated area of the county. This would bring the rate down much lower than for each community to have its own district, and more trucks would be available in case of a major conflagration. The various Chambers of Commerce throughout the county should make a study of this matter, and request the Board of Supervisors for a survey to determine the cost and feasibility of such a plan.

Trade at home! That's a good slogan 365 days of the year. The local merchants are here to serve you, and they can do it just as well or better than the fellows in the big city. Courtesy goes with every sale in Lemon Grove. The town is supplied with a diversified group of stores, but if there is anything you want that the merchant does not have, he will get it for you, and if he finds there is a continued demand for something that he does not stock, he will stock it. By trading with your home town merchants you are helping the community to grow into a better shopping center. The Lemon Grove business center is just what the people of the community make it. By trading at home they can build this town into the best business town in San Diego county. Give your local merchant a chance to serve you.

The San Diego metropolitan area is beginning to smell like the Los Angeles metropolitan area. This region, in the not too far distant future, is going to be faced with a smog problem. The writer has noticed an increase in gaseous odors since he first started making monthly visits to this metropolitan area a year ago. The biggest recent boost in street gases is the change over of the San Diego street railway to busses. Every additional car and bus adds to the fumes which the public must breathe. 'Tis a pity the electric automobile never came into its own.

JAMES DORAIS

California, like the old woman whose home was a shoe, has a top priority rating with the Stork. The State's bulging grammar schools attest to that!

Heavy influx of population from out of the State during the past few years has aggravated the classroom shortage problem, too California is worse off in that respect than most States.

But all over the country the same problem exists in varying degrees: more children than the schools can properly accommodate.

That brings us back to the stork For most communities did not fall behind in their provisions for school needs deliberately. They were double crossed by the stork!

Back in the 1930's, the statistical experts who make a living projecting the future by means of impressive charts and graphs were busy selling the idea that the Nation's birthrate would steadily decline. Some of the gloomier prophets muttered of race suicide. And all agreed that the better educated, presumably more intelligent segments of society were losing ground numerically to the low income groups.

But the predictions proved false.

According to recent estimates by the Census Bureau, the decade now drawing to a close will record a gain of over 1 million people, the largest population increase of any decade in American history.

Increased longevity because of strides in medical science and a small net immigration gain have contributed to the population growth. But the most important factor by far is the unprecedented baby boom that utterly confounded the experts.

Total births are running about four million a year. Before World War II the figure was only 2,5 million annually. Whereas a decade ago, babies were arriving at the rate of 18 per 1,000 population, today the ratio is 25 to 1,000.

The stork's new popularity is attributed to the long-time high level of employment, a much higher marriage rate, and the dislocations of the war which added new lustre to the age-old institutions of home and family.

Big families have become fashionable again, too. In Hollywood, the stars have taken to posing in family groups, whereas 10 years or so ago even marriage was considered bad box-office for a screen siren with a reputation for glamor to maintain.

The former reluctance of higher educated couples to clutter up the apartment with bassinettes and diaper buckets has been overcome too. The greatest percentage increase in the population sweepstakes was found in the ranks of college graduates.

America, it seems, is in no danger of committing race hara-kari. There is no shortage of babies—only shortages of schoolrooms and baby sitters,

Political Parade

CLEM WHITAKER, Jr.

California's political soothsayers won't make a flat prediction—last November's presidential election results are still too fresh in mind for that — but, they all concur that if Jimmy Roosevelt isn't a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor in 1950, he's certainly making all the noises of a man bitten with the gubernatorial bug.

Another slight matter on which politicos are in near complete agreement (again not for publication) is that Mr. James Roosevelt can take the measure of any other Democrat in the State who has his eye on the Governor's mansion in Sacramento.

True, the word is whispered Jimmy is at outs with a good many highly-placed Demo chieftains in the State. He also guessed wrong (along with the experts) on Mr. Truman's chances and tried to unseat the gentleman at the Democratic National Convention last year. Still, a lot of water has passed under the bridge in the intervening months and right now, by placing an ear against the political wailing wall it is possible to hear anti-Jimmy Democrats bemoaning the fact that they haven't anyone to beat him for the Democratic nomination.

Whether or not Roosevelt is the 'unbeatable' choice for the Demo nomination is open for debate. However, so long as he appears to be squared away and running, his recent speech to the Alameda County Democrats is interesting in that it gives some insight into Jimmy's strategy and beliefs.

Jimmy Roosevelt told his audience, in effect, that to win, a candidate needed to secure the so-called independent' vote. This his policy would be to use the Warren non-partisan label in going after the independents and to use a strictly Democratic label in chasing the Party vote.

Mr. Roosevelt further indicated that he will blame the Republicans and the Warren Administration for all the State's mistakes whether or not the Governor seeks another term or his party even grants him the nomination

Here are some of the mistakes which Roosevelt reportedly will toss at the GOP: A slow down in the State building program. The tax reduction granted during the war years. Passaage of the McLain Pension Scheme, Proposition 4 on last year's ballot. Failure to enact a State system of compulsory health insurance or socialized medicine. Failure to finance more school classrooms.

Concluding, Roosevelt whacked away at Governor Warren on the subject of liquor lobbyist Artie Samish. Commenting on the recent Collier's article where the Governor was quoted as saying Samish exerts more influence with the Legislature than he does in matters affecting Samish clients. Jim claimed that the Governor "does not speak for the Democratic members of the State Legislature."

From the record, it is plain to see that Jimmy is a candidate—even though few prognosticators will make such a 'rash' statement

IN OUR TOWN . . .

FISHING IS GOOD

Here in our town, summertime means fishing to many folks. And rightly so, because there are spots to catch the 'big ones.' It's always fun to talk about the "one that got away" just as it's fun to enjoy all around down-to-earth good living that we enjoy here in Lemon Grove. The folks who live here and the merchants who are in business here are the best. Ours is a great town in which to live and trade.

RED-HEADED WIFE

A SHORT-SHORT STORY
By MAUD McCURDY WELCH

"GUESS John P. will come across with a job for you before long, won't he?" Rufe Lafferty asked Bill Brown with a slight edge of malice in his throaty voice.

Bill moved uncomfortably in his chair. He just couldn't help feeling uncomfortable when anybody in town mentioned John, his younger brother. Bill knew they considered John a snob. And Bill knew that John wasn't. He was really fine and good, maybe just a little thoughtless, but nothing more.

Several years ago John had moved to the city to seek his fortune. Sumpterville, the little town where he was born, was much too small for a man with his ambition, he'd told them all. Strange to say, John had done everything he'd said he would. He'd made a fortune and had also married into society.

It seemed now that he was not only ashamed of his humble origin and his poor relations, he was also ashamed of his name, which was the good old honest-sounding one of John Perkins Brown. The Perkins part must have sounded countrified, for on his letter-heads John had it printed like this:

"John P. Brown, Agent and Counselor of Insurance."

It did sound bigger that way, Bill thought. Not that he ever had any letters from John, but sometimes one would come to the bank and then it would be spread all over town about how swanky John had got to be.

Bill and Sadie were just folks. And here was Bill nearing 44 and without a job and John P. not moving a finger to help him, though he must have known for some time that Bill was down on his luck. Things like that get around.

It wasn't Bill's fault that he was jobless. It was just one of those unfortunate things that happened in these disturbed post-war days. The furniture factory had had material trouble and one day it had just simply closed down for good.

So the weeks had gone by and Bill and Sadie's small savings were beginning to dwindle to alarming figures and still there was no word or sign from John P. One evening just before going to bed, Bill said unhappily, "Of course John is going to give me a job. He's not a snob like the people around here believed. It's just that . . . that he's awfully busy, and hasn't got around to—to fixing things up."

"Of course, darling. You'll hear from him before long. I feel sure you will." Sadie always encouraged Bill. She didn't dare not to for Bill was beginning to lose confidence in himself, a fatal thing to happen to any man.

Bill shot her a quick look. "Do you really believe that, Sadie?" There was a broken note in his voice as he went on, "You don't actually believe he's ashamed of us just because we're ordinary country folks, do you?"

"Of course I don't, honey," Sadie answered quickly; then she had to leave the room for the hot angry tears were crowding close in her eyes. She just couldn't bear the expression in Bill's face when he spoke of John . . . so wistful, so, hopeful. It always made her want to cry, because in her heart Sadie didn't believe in John at all. She was very much afraid he was really a snob just as the town said. And Sadie was not only red-headed, she was Irish, and sometimes when she thought of the way John ignored Bill in his trouble, she got fighting mad inside.

Bill walked the town over every day. It didn't take long. He asked everybody he met and practically every business man on the main street if there was any hope of having a vacancy before long. Bill wasn't too proud to do any kind of honest work, but there just simply wasn't anything.

The days were long. When night came, they sat close to the small gas stove with their coats over their shoulders to save gas. Winter had just started and it was showing signs of being a long hard one.

Bill and Sadie never stayed up late. It was cheaper to go to bed. Then they could lie in each other's arms and comfort each other. But sometimes an involuntary groan would escape Bill, "Oh, how long, how much longer must we wait and try to have hope?" and Sadie's heart would almost burst with its pain.

And nearly everyday the neighbors with their sly, sometimes sarcastic questions, "Heard from John P. yet?" always pronouncing the initial with a sort of contempt, as if to say, they knew that for all of John, Bill could stay right here in Sumpterville and starve.

One day Sadie's Irish got the better of her. She was mad, clean, fighting mad all the way through, and when she was like that, she knew she should never attempt to do anything. She was likely to say things she shouldn't, or get things confused. Better to wait until she felt calmer. But she couldn't. She was too keyed-up. She wrote John a letter that almost scorched the paper it was written on.

There were some letters on the desk Bill had written to various firms in and around the state, hoping to find a position. Sadie picked them up and hurried with her letter to the postoffice.

A few days later they received a letter from John. He wrote that he had a place for John in his own organization, but had been having trouble finding an apartment for them in the city. He'd managed to find a nice one at last and they were to come on as soon as they could get ready. He'd meet them at the train.

Sadie knew she would always remember Bill's eyes as he turned to her, shining with such faith and relief. "See, honey, John didn't forget. I knew he wouldn't."

"Yes . . . dear, I see." Sadie couldn't say any more because tears were stinging the back of her eyes. Bill's belief in John had always been heart-breaking. He must never, never know the truth.

The next day the postman handed Sadie a letter that had not been delivered at point of addressee's. Sadie stared at it. It was the one she'd written John. In her haste and anger, she'd confused the street numbers and the letter had come back unclaimed. So John hadn't even recevied it.

She tore the letter into tiny bits and sat down with a little plop. One thing certain: she'd learn a lesson from this—how to control her hasty temper, how to have more faith in her fellowmen. And always as long as she lived, she'd be glad she'd made a mistake and her angry letter had come back to her.

MAINTAINING EGG QUALITY

Summer heat may cause considerable loss in quality of eggs produced, according to Robert H. Adolph, assistant farm advisor. Poultrymen are cautioned to take proper care of their eggs to prevent loss in egg quality. Adolph points out that gathering eggs at least three times daily during summer weather is one of the main considerations in holding egg quality. These eggs should be gathered in baskets which will allow free circulation of air through the container, and stored in a cool lace. This practice allows the animal heat with which an egg is laid to be dispelled. Commercial producers have found that mechanical refrigeration is the only positive control for proper hoolding of temperature. But smaller producers have found that the evaporative cooler is very effective. Plans for farm evaporative coolers are available upon request from the Agricultural Extension Service of the University of California, Farm Advisor's office, U. S. Custom Bldg. San Diego.

Other aids in maintaining quality which Adolph emphasized are cooling eggs before packing and marketing at least twice weekly. The retailer and consumer can also prevent quality by keeping eggs under some type of refrigeration.

AVOCADO BOARDERS GO

There are still many avocado trees that do not pay for their keep. These perennial boarders are particularly numerous in the older plantings, reports Joe Coony of the Agricultural Extension Service. Coony suggests that these slackers be replaced or reworked.

Soome type of record of individual tree performance is very important. Most satisfactory is the record of field boxes actually harvested. Any system of numbers denoting good, fair, poor or no crop is better than no record. Memories are seldom sufficiently reliable. Data can be kept on a chart, a record book or on tags fastened to the tree.

In many older orchards, a knowledge of tree performance can be helpful in evolving a plan or program to alleviate crowded conditions. If trees are to be removed, non-producers or poor producers should be first to go. If the boarders are healthy—free from sun-blotch—they may be topworked, using graft wood from a heavy producer.

Now, when crop estimates are being made, is a good time to work out a system to record individual tree production. But, the effort involved is only justified when followed up by corrective action.

PENTACHLOROPHENOL FOR FENCE POSTS

The cold soaking treatment of fence posts with pentachlorophenol is well adapted to farm use. F. W. Doorman, assistant farm advisor, of the Agricultural Extension Service, says it is simple, does not require much special equipment nor much labor.

Round posts cut from small trees make the best fence posts since the sapwood on the outside is more absorbent than the heartwood. Split posts from larger trees are mostly heartwood.

The best time to cut the trees is in the spring after the new growth has started, because the bark can be peeled easily at that time. However, they can be cut at any time of the year. After the bark is peeled, the trees must be seasoned to remove the moisture. The posts should be piled well off the ground and protected from the rain if possible. It usually takes from three to nine months to season peeled posts.

The part of the post below the ground needs the most protection. Sometimes holes punched in this part of the post will let the preservative get deeper into the wood.

Dorman says an empty 55 gallon oil or gasoline drum with the head cut out makes a good treating tank.

The pentachlorophenol may be purchased in a form ready to use or in a concentrated solution, the latter being the most economical for farm use. The concentrate is diluted with fuel or Diesel oil to make a five percent. solution for treating.

Stand the posts on end in the treating tank with the butt ends down. Put only one kind of wood in the tank at a time. Fill the tank with the pentachlorophenol solution so that it stands at about the 30-inch level on the posts, and allow hem to soak for 24 hours, or until each post has absorbed from two to two and one-half pounds of solution. Remove them from the tank and stand them upside down for about an hour to allow any extra preservative to run to the upper part of the post. Farmers who have had trouble with decay in the top of the post may want to turn the posts over in the tank and soak the tops for 15 minutes.

Equestrian Activities in and Around Lemon Grove

By MARGE ELLISON

Lemon Grove riders and exhibitors are diligently working with saddle soap, polish, currycomb and shears for a flamboyant turn-out at the Powow tomorrow (Friday.) They will need to be at their best to uphold their city, as competition is going to be keen and wirespread among the equine entries in the parade. The most-distant group, so far, to signify participation in Lemon Grove's first gigantic undertaking, so far as parades are concerned, is the Valley Center Renegades from up Escondido way.

Then the Iona Horse Club of Encanto will enter as a unit of 35 riders; the Aztec Riders will enter their color guard—and there'll be silver saddles, comic riders trick riders and many surprising entries, which promise to make the parade one of top-notch quality. Above all, every horseman in and around Lemon Grove should turn out in their best riding regalia, with horses sleek and shining animated action and co-ordinated military style parading so as to be a compliment to themselves and the parade committee which is working strenuously to make this an outstanding affair. Riders are requested to be in formation at Massachusetts avenue and Federal boulevard at 5:00 p. m. tomorrow (Friday) so that parade positions can be assigned and registration taken of the parade entries. Remember, it is your big chance to show the rest of the county what superior horse flesh and horsemen we have in Lemon Grove.

Next Sunday will be the Third Annual All-Pinto Horse Show put on by Walter Church at the Veteran's Civic Memorial Field in El Cajon. Breeding classes start at 9:00 a. m., and judging from the faraway entries received of yearlings and young stock to be shown, along with outstanding pintos from various counties, the show should be interesting, educational and exciting from start to finish. There are 24 classes scheduled, with a special exhibition of trick and high school horses in the afternoon. So with a full program like that, there is sure to be something doing every minute. Cecil Morgan is the announcer and his smooth flow of words is endless and adequate to all occasions. In other words, he'll keep things humin'.

The Rock 'N Riders will put on another Fun Show next Saturday at their show ring in El Cajon. The games will start at 3:15 p. m. and the entry fees are 25c. They also have good home made cake and pies as part of the refreshments. No admission is charged to spectators, so for an evening of fun—put it on your list.

The "Poor Man's Trail Ride" from San Diego to Carmel Valley—an over-night affair, with about four hours' riding each day, with good chuck-wagon food furnished, a big barn dance, etc.—is taking shape for October 8 and 9. All horsemen in the entire county are invited and full details will be published soon.

The second annual Horse Show put on last Sunday by the Pine Valley Improvement Association at Pine Valley, was quite successful, and more than 2000 horsemen and spectators were on hand to watch the 18 classes. In the children's Classes (16 years and under) in the morning, Joan Sharman topped the record by taking first award in Western Pleasure horse, Musical Chairs and Bending race, then second ribbon in the Stake race and third award in Western Trail horse. She alternately rode Cookie and Miss Freckles. The horse that made a record number of showings was Dusty, owned by Pat Binford of Escondido. Dusty was shown alternately by Pat Binford, Sharlene Patten and Joe Joe Zwycaffer,, and he won his riders a total of seven awards. Clark Batshelder was announcer for the show and John and Lee Pingley, of Pine Valley, were the horse show chairmen. They expressed their gratitude to all the horsemen for the big turn-out.
